Contributors / Collaborateurs

Vardit Lightstone is a doctoral candidate in a Joint Education Placement Program between the Germanic Languages and Literatures Department and the Collaborative Program in Jewish Studies at the University of Toronto and the Folklore and Folk Culture Program at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Her research interrogates the folk literary genre of life stories and the ways migrants adapt folklore to fit their new realities and to express hybrid identities. She received her MA from the Hebrew University for her thesis, "Tomás writes a book: Folk narrative style and cultural contexts in the Irish autobiography An tOileánach." Her doctoral studies are supported by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada.

Gesa Trojan is a researcher and educator at Deutsches Historisches Museum in Berlin, Germany, and a PhD candidate at the Center for Metropolitan Studies at Technische Universität Berlin. With her dissertation she investigates Jewish food as urban heritage in Toronto during the first half of the 20th century.

Joshua Tapper is a PhD student in the Department of History at Stanford University. His research focuses on the reconstruction of Jewish communal life in the Soviet Union during the late 1980s and early 1990s.

Daniel Rickenbacher is a Kreitman postdoctoral fellow at the Ben-Gurion Research Institute for the Study of Israel and Zionism at Ben Gurion University and a former research associate at the Concordia Institute for Canadian Jewish Studies in Montreal. He works in the fields of contemporary history, international politics and security studies. Daniel Rickenbacher studied History, Religion and Political Science in Zurich, Basel, and Jerusalem and received a PhD from the University of Zurich. From 2014 to 2018, Daniel Rickenbacher was a research assistant at the Chair of Strategic Studies the Swiss Military Academy at the ETH Zurich.

Nadine Ijaz is a Postdoctoral Fellow cross-listed to the University of Toronto's Faculty of Pharmacy and Department of Sociology. Her trans-disciplinary research, focused in the health field, addresses the translation of traditional and indigenous knowledges into policy, pedagogy and research methodology. In 2018 and 2019, she was distinguished with two teaching awards at McMaster University in relation to her undergraduate course on Food Justice.

Paige Mawson graduated from McMaster University's Arts & Science Program in 2019. Pursuing her interest in pedagogy and epistemology, she will begin a Master's Degree at the University of Toronto in September 2020. In future, she hopes to pursue an academic career paired with hands-on farming and equestrian initiatives.